Bringing knowledge and enlightenment to Africa's most vulnerable children

GUIDELINES FOR DONATING BOOKS FOR LUBUTO LIBRARY COLLECTIONS

© 2009 Lubuto Library Project, Inc.

Lubuto is committed to compiling strong collections of excellent books for street kids, orphans and other vulnerable children in Zambia. Needed are picture books, fiction and non-fiction, but especially informational books with lots of illustrations or photographs along with simple explanations and definitions. Books should be in brand-new condition, not outdated, and in English. Reference books should be current and in complete sets. Hardcover is preferred but sturdy trade paperback books can also be included.

We cannot use: pop-up books, magazines, textbooks, instruction manuals, pamphlets, study guides, school readers, publishers' advance reading copies, single volumes from an incomplete set, movie and television tie-ins (for example, Disney books), or books that strongly seek to promote a particular cause or religious or ideological point of view.

General considerations and guidelines:

- Books are for boys and girls from early childhood through about age 18 whose first language is usually not English.
- Lubuto collections are non-circulating; the children will only be able to read books during visits to the library.
- Books dealing with subjects relevant only to the U.S. should be limited in number.
- We especially seek books about or set in Africa. Also, some books written for an African-American audience will make very good additions to Lubuto collections.
- Books should be in great condition, containing no scribbling, torn or discolored pages or broken spines.

Good non-fiction choices:

- Well-presented illustrated books on nature, science, sports, crafts, technology, geography, history and especially biographies;
- Simple, clear explanations of how things work;
- Simple science books (which don't require equipment for doing experiments);
- Factual stories about how children live all over the world;
- We do not include books that strongly seek to promote a particular cause or religious or ideological point of view.

Good fiction choices:

- Stories, poetry and drama--but please be sensitive to cultural and economic differences; one way to ensure that you are transcending cultural differences is to stick to the classics: classical and folk literature.
- Top-notch, but shorter and easily-readable, contemporary stories, mysteries, science fiction, historical fiction, classic titles for young readers; no long novels or series books for older readers.
- Easy chapter books with real-life stories and human characters (rather than complex fantasy stories).
- Think about books that embody the ways in which reading brings hope into the world.
- Please omit books that reflect a very affluent lifestyle (big houses, cars, lots of electronic equipment and other possessions).
